OUR MERCANTILE MARINE.

Present Condition of Our Shipping Interests.

One Thousand American Ships Sold During the War.

Pive Hundred Thousand Tuns of Shipping Transferred to Other Flags.

Now that the War is ended, and our merchants feel justified in sending abroad their ships, and to enter into the commercial arena again, we regret to find that hundreds of our finest merchant ships are no longer our property, and do not bear over them our glorious banner, which a few brief years ago could be found in every port of any note on the face of the globe. To-day we can see, by a walk along the wharves, of not only this, but other of our large seaport cities and towns, the flags of all nations floating over a majority of the finest vessels we have constructed during the past seven

This fact seems strange to the general reader, who will naturally ask for the reason of this great change. The briefest answer we can give is that England, in not preventing the fitting out of Rebel pirates, in her desire to overshadow us, and control the carrying trade of the ocean in carrying out her fixed principle of aggrandize-ment and selfishness, has been the direct cause of the marked change in our position as a great mercantile marine nation.

Our merchants to save themselves from ruin, to en able them to carry on business with some degree of safety, have sold under other flags their ships, until we are left with a mere handful, where five years ago we were second only on the list of commercial nations in respect to tunnage. The bold and desperate operations of the few privateers and pirates furnished the Rebels by England, thinned out our number, and scores of our est vessels either were destroyed by fire or were sent to the bottom of the ccean by scuttling, or by shell fired into them. Only a few were bonded, the object of these piratical rovers being to destroy and annoy our com-merce to the full extent of their ability. How well they have succeeded, how much they have destroyed, is question not answered by mere facts and figures.

At one time our Navy, which found unceasing em-ployment in making the blockade of effect and in aiding our large army in its operations, was powerless to rid the sea of these pests and to furnish full protection to our merchant vessels. We did not possess vessels—a sufficient number of swift cruisers—which were able to outsail the vessels which were giving us so much annoyance. Wise counsels in reference to this important subject did not always prevail, and in consequence our merchants, wearied and worried out of patience and bope, sought relief in taking out "provisional registers" for their vessels under other flags. These "provisional registers," by the laws of Great Britain, hold good for six months; but to be of any value the ship holding it must enter a British port within that time and take out a full register, else the protection sought is of no avail. By another law a ship becoming the property of a British subject cannot be sold under another flag except in circumstances which render the act so trouble some that it is not worth the while to go through the routine necessary to accomplish the end. Hence we have in a measure lost some of our finest vessels, and much interest abroad represented by the heavy tunnage transferred. Not a single steamer has crossed the ocean during the past four years carrying the mails and passengers ever which floated our flag. England, France, Bremen, Hamburg, and even Sweden and Russia, have been doing that work. There seems to have been a combination organized by the force of circumstances to drive us from the ocean entirely. Take up the shipping list of any week for the last three years and look at the arrivals and clearances. It is truly an unpleasant comparison with that of a few years ago. Think of it. It is not an unfrequent thing for seven foreign steam-ers to sail from the United States for European ports in ship owners and the Government will awake to the im-pertance of our present standing as a commercial and mercantile-marine nation. It was not until the latter part of 1862 that it becan apparent that we could no longer hope to carry on our foreign trade under our own flag and in our ships. The almost with a forlorn hope that any vessel was sent to sea. To save themselves and protect their property our merchants in large numbers began to transfer their ald protect them. The effect of the movements this direction on the part of a few of our leading merchants was instantaneous, and in a few weeks after the To give our readers an idea of the amount of tunnage transferred during a period of say 18 months, or, perhaps, ess time, we append a list of vessels sold to sail under the British flag alone.

In addition to these vessels there are numbers, say 200, and perhaps more, which were transferred to the flags of Brazil, Buenos Ayres, Spain, Italy, and other minor powers. In round numbers we have lost 1,000

The stock is scarcer than when it sold at 99, and the short interest is still very large. The general market, under fears of dearer money, was sold down early in the day, and the reduced quotations prevailed up to the meeting of the Second Board. Gold opened at 143, and closed at 144. The payments on account of Customs are steadily increasing the hoard at the Sub-Treasury, and the sooner Mr. McCulloch announces the prepayment of the November Coupons upon the 5-20s in full the better. The Stock Exchange would, at the request of the Secretary, direct them to be called Coupon off, which would force the gold into circulation from the Sub-Treasury more rapidly than was done under former prepayments. If this does not reduce the balance of coun, he can under his power to sell gold, sell the accumulation which is now helping speculators and deranging business in all departments.

Government Stocks are strong, and 5-20s sold as high as 10 for the old issue, closing at 1061. For the 7.30s there is a steady demand, and large amounts of the early issues are not obtained readily. State and Railway bonds are neglected. In the miscellaneous shares, little doing. The Boston Commercial Bulletin of the 20th says:

The money market has been a little feverish, and the rates of interest have somewhat advanced. The banks are reluctant to discount paper at 7 per cent, or to make call loans at 6 per cent. Currency is less abandant, and the banking institutions, as well as the private capitalists, are triamming their sales in anticipation of further contraction. Government is drawing closely on the city National banks, and heavy payments for the Seren-Thirties have greatly reduced the general deposit lia. One hundred and sixty millions of Compound-interest United States notes are gradually ceasing to be current money. These bills are held at from $i$ to 3 per cent money. These bills are held at from $i$ to 3 per cent money. These notes are a nuisance. They should never have been issued, and the sooner they are funded the better for us all.
